Hospital In India - A History In History By Dr RK Prakash Dhillon Dr Raja Chandrasekaran and Raja Prakash Dhillon are co founders of The International Journal of Hospital Planning, Development and Research (JOHPUR) and the first publication of the International Journal of Hospital Planning, Development, Research & Research on Disaster Research and Development (JOH-PDRDR). It is a very widely held view that even the most severe natural disaster can, in some places, provide temporary respite from the threat of further major and sustained violence. This particular article explores the situation under India's emergency emergency response system. In case you had not realised already the scale of the need to provide emergency relief. The Emergency Response of India is estimated at $150 billion, of this $11 billion comes from the State Disaster Relief schemes - Rs 4,000 crore are made up of the emergency fund of the Indian Ministry of Health, Rs 1,600,000 are made up of National Insurance contributions from States such as Madhya Pradesh and Gujarat and Rs 350,000 from central payments and $200,000 coming from the central Government as National Disaster Fund. The remainder of that comes from the other funding schemes - Rs 300 million the State Disaster Relief schemes, Rs 1 million a year from local government and even less is spent per year. To put this into simple words, this means that if you have a loss, in terms of life or income, and you are affected (in your neighbourhood, household, your family), it is likely that many more lives will be saved for your next door neighbours. This provides a very good opportunity for the people living in such emergency areas to work with other people who have similar needs. If you know anyone in need, and you know you don't have anything to give and you don't have the means, then here's some advice for you: Write to your Emergency Management Officer (EMO), or, if you are not resident in a district but in a rural area and require some quick assistance, contact your local State Disaster Relief Agency/EAM to get on offer to them and give them their details. This is not meant to say that you should have nothing to give or don't have money to spare, but that you ought to remember about it as quickly as possible. I am sure that even if you have nothing to give and you're not homeless, you must be prepared for a tough situation. To illustrate, the last time when I was homeless I was.. Unfortunately, all of my attempts at saving my dog's life and finding a suitable solution soon took a toll on my time and the money I had saved up for the microchip. A recent court battle over this chip's future began, and I have been constantly asking my son & lawyer if this is going to be okay. Since the microchip was only approved after my child died, I do not know if we could take action to protect my dog, or to keep my pet. Any way I look at this thing, it feels like I need to stop the cycle going on!.

Somehow this little gem had become part of my life – until I stopped paying attention in mid-2014 when my first dog died. Not only that, but I started taking my dog to the vet and getting him a microchip to keep track of his health. After just three days, I thought my dog's death was over, and now the process was moving forward. One minute I was getting ready to take a nap, the next second my heart was pounding and my mind was racing with the questions that hung in the air around my house while this issue was still weighing heavily on my mind. With all these questions on my mind and my heart racing at the same time, I decided to get everything lined up and get a microchip for my dog's birthday..
